We are dedicated to improving Lightroom, but we have to be mindful of your needs. One of the reasons we have to be mindful is because we have to acknowledge that our customer base and our target market has changed. We go to every Photoshop conference, we have an internal sales and demo team that reach out to and get to know skilled photographers and designers. Developers in our IT department work with limited resources, however, to help shape the roadmap for our operation. It's a big-picture issue, and the decision to refocus our attention into the Digital Workflow including Adobe Story is very challenging. We are pleased to announce that we are moving forward with the native importation of JPEG and TIFF images to Adobe Story. And the best part, the new Live Exporting feature in Photoshop — this is previewed in the full Photoshop 2018 release. We're still working on the new Live Exporting process in order to decide what extensions we want to add to the process - some data is locked and this is how we will unlock it. For now, we've worked out how to do archiving. Thanks to the CS6, the ability to work on large groups of images at once was moved to a new performance level. This mode is persistent, but you can turn it off if you want to work with a single image at a time. The difference is quite noticeable. Not only the file size is smaller, but the application behaves much faster. dynamic Filters are one of the key features of the new release. In some cases, the filters become a valuable asset in your workflow: to increase the saturation, light up the shadows or blurry the background.

“ We’re always looking for more ways to make the most popular imaging software for photographers and graphic designers faster, smarter, and easier to use,” said Shantanu Narayen, Adobe president and CEO. “ We’re looking forward to these new and exciting breakthroughs that will help address the needs of both creators and end users.” Share for Review, a beta feature that enables non-designers to easily collaborate on creative projects and invite others to review and approve, has been available for a year. During this time, users have shared billions of projects and made over 2000 million comments on the features and functionality of the application. Previous research on collaboration comments shared by users showed that people will comment approximately 80% of the time if they know their comments will be visible to the other collaborators. Adobe brings the world's most creative apps to one place with full cross-product access, allowing all merchandise, display and workflow professionals to work with a unified design and production workflow across desktop printers, canvas printing solutions, digital front ends and production services. This means graphic designers, printshop managers and entire production teams can finally collaborate on the same project from start to finish. For the first time, every team member gets access to Adobe XD — the world's leading prototyping tool for designing and prototyping vector-based workflows. This includes a tablet and stylus; many drawing, animation and illustration tools; and custom ink and paint effects— all without needing to switch apps. As part of this vision, Photoshop and Illustrator are being reimagined as a single creative application. With the transition to a single application you gain faster access to design and production resources, more control over your design workflow, and the ability to collaborate directly with other designers, without falling back to a different editing tool. The best part is it works right from the desktop. With the introduction of Design Share, users can now contribute, browse and view designs online and connected devices through a single URL that works on mobile, desktop and any screen size. Users can also add annotations to designs, receive comments from other site members and incorporate design feedback through a more fluid review and comment process. All someone has to do is paste the URL of pages or files they want to share, and other site members can access them right away through a unified file manager. This includes the ability to comment on designs, navigate and manage comments on designs, and reply directly to comments.
